书面表达

21. 【答案】 Last Friday as I rose late, I rode my bike super fast on my way to school, passing by cars for fear of being late. Seeing my classmates riding ahead, I breathed a sigh of relief. But what happened next was something I wasn't prepared for. The handlebars of my bike accidentally hit the rearview mirror of a car parked by the roadside and broke the mirror. I knew that I was in big trouble, panicked, not knowing what to do. Should I run or wait for the car owner to come?

Hesitating for a moment, I left a note that included my cellphone number and explained what happened. For the rest of the day, I had a tremendous amount of anxiety. When I got home, I nervously told my parents about the accident, expecting a storm of criticism. Much to my surprise and relief, they approved of how I dealt with it.

This accident taught me a great lesson: take responsibility, which is exactly how we should face our mistakes and grow. (173 words)

范文2：

This morning, I accidentally scratched a car on the way to school, which turned out to be an experience that have taught me a lesson in my life.

Having got up late in the morning, I rode my bike to school quickly and anxiously, hoping to get to school at lightning speed. Suddenly, a car parked at the side of the road came into my view. I braked short, but I was riding so fast that the bike just went on moving until it bumped into the car with a halt, scratching the car and leaving a big scar on it.

At that moment, I fell into a dilemma. On the one hand, I ought to get to school immediately to attend my lessons. On the other hand, I should be responsible for the scratch because it was I who have made it, but the owner wasn't in the car and I might have to wait for ages. Before long, an excellent idea occurred to me. I wrote a note to express my profuse apology and wrote my name, my phone number and my school on the piece of paper so that I could compensate for the owner of the car if necessary.

Then I went to school in relief. To my surprise, the owner of the car was so moved by my honesty and sense of responsibility that he paid a visit to our school. Upon arrival, he rushed to tell my teacher what I had done and spoke highly of my deeds. My teacher also praised me in front of the class, which made me very proud.

From this experience, I have learned that honesty and responsibility are merits we should always keep whatever kind of situation we are in. I have also made great progress in solving problems in ways which are not only feasible, but also creative.
